

New York Stock Market

New York, September 6.—The recovery in stocks was carried further today. The movement was less vigorous than yesterday, and gains among the important issues were smaller, but the improvement was broader in its scope, extending to many of the semi-active railroad and industrial stocks. Stocks were not pressed for sale, on the contrary, offerings were small, except at higher figures. Although the August remained light, sellers did not find it difficult to advance prices in almost every direction whenever any demand appeared.

As on other recent days, there were signs of nervousness on the bear side. Covering of short contracts was perhaps the most important influence in bringing about the advance, but there appeared to be greater activity on the long side of the market. One of the important bull traders who has been inactive for some time was reported today to have reopened operations. That a somewhat better feeling existed was evident, although the upward tendency was not generally regarded as marking an important turning point in the market. The powerful interests, so far as is known, the chief financial agents are not investing heavily. The public, however, is showing a more active interest in the lower scale of prices not having led to extensive investment buying.

In line with the course of stocks was the movement of the bond market. Transactions in listed bonds were considerably large and private sales also were reported as having become heavier. In the securities department of the securities market has been one of the most disappointing. The public, however, is showing a more active interest in the lower scale of prices not having led to extensive investment buying.

The stagnation which prevailed in the investment market last month was shown by the output of new railroad bonds. The output of new railroad bonds was $1,200,000 in August, which fell to $1,016,000 in September, as compared with $1,293,000 in July and $238,337,000 in June. The railroad offerings amounted to the abnormal amount of $14,341,000, or only half the total for the corresponding month of 1910.

The higher level of stocks established in the early trading was maintained most of the day. There was an increase in selling later in the afternoon and prices declined somewhat, although not to such an extent as to disturb the more bullish feeling. The selling converged in United States Steel, one block of 5,000 shares being disposed of. The price of this stock fell nearly a point, but a large part of the day's gains elsewhere were retained.
